The skytongue mounts, kara mount Ash, talbuks flying machines, and an hoppygrlyph. Each had distinct models, with the only exception being the kara mount, which was essentially one horse with fangs.

Ok look I feel you. For real I get it. The TBC reps also feel important. Do it once, and you'll get access to the heroics you're looking for. There are some items that can be extremely valuable in the event of repeating it this is the reason some aren't easy to replace.

It's exactly. It's so easy to feel like you are getting the Frenzied Feltalon, even though it's a simple Recoloring of two mountings. The simple difference in color isn't enough to compensate for the massive distinction in difficulty. There are so many recolors on certain mounts, they seem to blend and you don't care if its the insanely difficult or freebie because the two are in close proximity, the worth of the crazy mount actually drops, because the freebie mount's value isn't going to increase, even though it looks like a rare mount.

They are all recolours accessible via different methods. Then there are all the drake mounts from WotLK and Cata which are just recolours of rare spawn drops/reputation/achievement rewards.

Then there are the other raid mounts which I didn't mention, such as Glacial Tidestorm from mythic Jaina that is a reskin of the shaman class mount, or Ny'alotha Allseer from mythical N'Zoth that's another reskinned jellyfish mount.

It depends on what you mean by "reskin". It depends on what you want to convey by "reskin".

Archimonde's Felsteel Anihilator is the one mythic mount that I can recall being "original in the time". The new Sylvanas mythic mount could be an entirely new type of model as well.

A recolour can be described as a texture swap. Im not certain as far as the definition is concerned. It's certainly much easier to recolour than everything else and all they have to do is an instrument to alter the color on it and then call it an evening.

its why its so fucking frustrating to see so many armors just being recolours since you could just put an intern on that and they'd mostly be good. Recolors must be accessible to all sliders.

I was wondering the possibility that a recolour could be an actual skin. Reskins were always a part of my understanding of animations, but with a completely different design. A recolour is, however, an recolour.
