One of WOW NPC-Kil'jaeden

Kil'jaeden is pretty capable in maintaining his very own judgment. He will give considerable tolerance to the failure of his staff caused by accidental encounters. As long as they are yet to fallen in to the edge of chaos, they'll need the opportunity to make up for their faults, a sensible and effective measure to boost their loyalty. Kil'jaeden may also carefully consider their excuses and explanations in addition to their advantages and achievements. These policies come in direct contrast to Archimonde's attitude which enable it to be summarized as "success or death."

Kil'jaeden once respected Velen, regarded him being a "brother" and listed him as his chief competitor. After Velen's departure, Kil'jaeden's sense of being "betrayed by his best friend" angered him for centuries, causing great confusion to his servants and Archimonde. Even with such hatred, Kil'jaeden might maintain his reassurance and stabilize his mind, but Kil'jaeden's revenge will push the Draenei into a place in excess of any previous enemy while using Burning Legion. Dismal ending.

Vandal's proposal fights Velen

Twenty-five thousand a long time ago, the incredible Ereda people built their civilization on earth Argus, a race born to understand how to cast. Kil'jaeden was called "a genius in a very genius race" by his people for his wisdom, with his fantastic status quickly rose for being one of Erida's later 3 leaders. The other two were his colleague Archimonde and greatest friend Velen. When the three leaders started in contact with all the saboteur Sargeras, Eredar's social system started disintegrate. Sargeras created a deal with them: in return for infinite power and prestige so they could earn their loyalty. Planting WOW Classic Gold will waste you a large number of time, if you make use of completing the project to get gold, you will waste a lot of your time.
